FONDAZIONE PRADA OSSERVATORIO
EU: SATOSHI FUJIWARA

Milan, 7 June 2017 – Fondazione Prada presents “EU”, an anthological exhibition by Japanese photographer Satoshi Fujiwara at the Osservatorio in the Galleria Vittorio Emanuele II in Milan from 7 June to 16 October 2017. The show includes some of the most significant works by the artist long with “5K Confinement”, a commission realized for “Belligerent Eyes”, an experimental media research project on image production hosted at Fondazione Prada in Venice in Summer 2016.

Curated by Luigi Alberto Cippini in a set-up conceived by Armature globale, the exhibition offers an alternative to the representational regimes which have set the ground for the current “European photographic identity”. As stated by Cippini, “contemporary photographic production seems to be regulated by strict resolution, impact and distribution standards. An increasing number of freelance reporters daily document social and political events within and on the edges of the European Union, producing images that, although free from any rigid classification standards, seem to be nonetheless subject to specific aesthetic, accessibility, spatial and content regimes. Such constraints allow and support the work of new generations of photographers, increasing the possibilities for their photos to be published yet contributing to the standardization of an average, neutral taste”.

Satoshi Fujiwara (Kobe, Japan, 1984), initiates a pressing and critical action on the gazer, through the focal length set from portrayed subjects and the heterogeneous definition of his photographs, diverting from the standards of photo-journalism and from an exclusively documentary dimension, thus producing a new emerging lexicon.

“5K Confinement” (2016) documents the spatial and architectural intervention inside Ca’ Corner della Regina, Fondazione Prada’s Venetian venue, during the course of experimental film school “Belligerent Eyes”. By creating a remake of the techniques employed by Japanese photographer Ikko Kagari, the author of a voyeuristic manual to realize infra-red female portraits, Fujiwara confronted himself with the project’s core architectural installation, recording its technological environment and unveiling its integrated surveillance systems.

The upper floor is devoted to a collection of images shot in different European capital cities.
In “#R” (2015-ongoing), the artist presents the deconstruction of seemingly real conflicts between the police and protesters. By voluntarily altering the origin and context of the images and by reducing the angle of view, Fujiwara reflects on the potential use of photographic reportage and its distribution as a means for consent and critique. “Venus” (2016-ongoing) documents the behavior of the audience at a German erotic fair, whereas in “Friday: A report on a report” (2015-2016) his attention shifts to the photojournalists and TV reporters during the Paris terrorist attacks in November 2015. Fujiwara contracts the details on the external context to highlight the visual violence determined by specific environmental constraints and by a reduced security perception.

The set up for “EU” is made up of assembled images, which aim to eliminate any linear narrative context. This operation was inspired by the re-elaboration of an exhibition architecture designed by Herbert Bayer for “The Road to Victory: a procession of photographs of the nation at war”, a show held at MoMA in New York in 1942. Portions of worn out cameras, along with different forms of human presence and surveillance, all converge in some kind of tazibao: this historical form of public information employed during the Chinese Cultural Revolution is combined with currently widespread visual association constraints, such as video editing and digital manipulation softwares. As explained by Cippini, the exhibition set-up is “a conglomeration of definition formats and standards which documents the inurement to image consumption, as well as the necessity to dialogue with less visible means of contemporary propaganda”.

“EU” is accompanied by a publication, “5K Confinement. HD Environment Surface Surveillance “, curated by Luigi Alberto Cippini and edited by Fondazione Prada.
